MOROCCO, November 20, 2011 – Addressing the needs of the ever expanding global aviation industry, Honeywell (NYSE:HON) has entered into a new distributor agreement with commercial aircraft spare parts supplier, American General Supplies, Inc (AGS). Under the terms of the agreement, commercial airline customers throughout Africa will have readily available access to Honeywell’s range of avionics, mechanical components and wheels and brakes, as well as the support of its global Maintenance, Retrofit and Overhaul (MRO) services.

The agreement between Honeywell and AGS, announced during November's African Airlines Association conference in Morocco, represents Honeywell's commitment to supporting the growth of aviation in emerging markets across the globe.

Responding to a clear demand from African carriers, the announcement will enable AGS to provide its diverse customer base with immediate access to Honeywell's large portfolio of OEM quality parts and services, ensuring fleets stay operational.

About American General Supplies, Inc.

American General Supplies, Inc. (AGS) is a commercial aircraft spare parts supplier to the aviation industry. AGS supplies airframe, engine, and avionic components; chemicals; ground support equipment, tools, and shop equipment.

AGS also provides a wide range of services to the industry's leading airlines and support organizations, including establishing branch stock at client locations, consignment of customer surplus parts, repair and overhaul services, and providing technical assistance and training.

Currently, 50% of AGS' business is generated in Africa where it has a long standing service history and a broad customer base. AGS' credit strength and ability to provide project financing in support of African aviation, has been recognised by the Export-Import Bank of the United States and by Bank of America. The US Export-Import Bank earlier named AGS the Small Business Exporter of the year for sub-Saharan Africa.
